Course Description

Managerial accounting is the second foundation course to be studied by students interested in pursuing a baccalaureate degree with an emphasis in accounting. This course introduces students to accounting as an internal user with a management perspective. Students will learn how to accumulate and allocate relevant costs associated with product manufacturing. The areas of job costing, process costing, and activity-based costing (ABC) will be explored. Additionally, students will learn breakeven analysis and contribution margins.

Course Objectives

- Define the role of managerial accounting in business
- Describe the flow of costs in a manufacturing organization
- Describe the accumulation and assignment of materials, labor, and overhead in a job cost environment
- Describe the behavior of costs over a relevant range of operations
- Define the steps involved in the creation of an organization's master budget.
