Course Description

Cost accounting has significant role in regard to how management is going to achieve current and long term objectives. Accurate accumulation and allocation of product costs impacts the organization's selling prices and margins for each product. This course, which is a continuation of BUAD 211, explores the cost systems used by manufacturers and retailers today. Additionally, this course examines how the cost information is disseminated to different levels of management as a monitoring mechanism.

Course Objectives/Learning Outcomes

- Describe the role of cost accounting in the current business environment.
- Describe how an organization utilized the balanced scorecard to be strategically competitive.
- Describe the role of life cycle target costing in strategic management.
- Define the various types of management compensation and how it affects performance.
